

Remove OnBase Document Locks

Occasionally, you may lock yourself out of an OnBase document. This can happen if your browser crashes while viewing a document or if you've opened the document in multiple windows at the same time. When locked, you won't be able to edit the document/form. Rather than wait the 20 minutes for the session timeout to clear the lock, you can usually remove these locks yourself.

Web Client

Click the top drop-down that reads "Document" by default and select User. Then, Click the 2nd drop-down that will read "Mail" and choose Locked Objects.

If you have any documents locked, you will see them listed here. If nothing is listed, it's possible the document is locked by someone else. In that case, contact your OnBase Administrator.

First, Check the box next to the document you wish to unlock. Then, click the Remove Lock button.

When you open the document/form again, it should now be editable. If you already have it opened in another window, you'll need to move away from the document (or close it) and come back for it to be unlocked.

Unity Client

A list of all documents you have open will appear. To remove the lock, select the document in the list, then click Remove Selected.

When you open the document/form again, it should now be editable. If you already have it opened in another window, you'll need to move away from the document (or close it) and come back for it to be unlocked.

Since you only see documents you have locked, if there are no documents listed, it's possible the document is locked by someone else. In that case, contact your OnBase Administrator.
